MEET THE AUTHOR

BOOK DISCUSSION AND Q & A

The main objective of the book is to defend our ordinary concept of collective moral responsibility from the attacks of normative and methodological individualism and to rationalise it by drawing on the latest resources from philosophy of mind, action, and social ontology. It redeems this everyday concept by developing a non-individualist account of collective moral agency- an agency that avoids not just the extravagant commitments of collectivism but also certain platitudinal truths of individualism. The proposed account interprets collective responsibility as collective's responsibility. It does so without either reducing it to an issue of the responsibility of the constituent members or making it a case where their individual moral positions become blurred.
